ENCYCLICAL ON THE EARTH

Pope Francis has issued an Encyclical Letter 'LAUDATO SI' (PRAISE BE) which will receive a warm welcome from all who are concerned about the care of the Earth and the abuses which threaten the wellbeing of our planet. The Pope goes to great lengths to echo the many and various points put forward by environmentalists. But the letter is written to record the Church's teaching, though it is not aimed at Catholics alone, unlike most previous Encyclicals, but 'addressed to all people of good will' (Ch2,1). It is clearly written with the tacit acknowledgement that those people who have been most influential in forming and passing on environmental standards have generally disregarded any consideration of belief in God and where He might fit into the picture.

Chapter 2 is the core of the Encyclical, a masterly and moving summary of Catholic teaching on the relationship between God, human beings and the earth. It will probably be the yardstick by which the morality and legitimacy of environmental theory and practice will be measured by the Church for centuries to come.

The Encyclical can be opened as a Word Doc from the News page of my website:
