TODAY'S SCRIPTURE

In today's First Reading Isaiah claims to proclaim God's intentions for his people, Israel: The eyes of the blind shall be opened, the ears of the deaf unsealed ... That was two and a half thousand years ago – If anything, things have got worse.

John the Baptist had looked forward to one coming after him, one stronger than he. Jesus came – but John's dreams did not eventuate.

In that brief section of his letter that we read today, St James tells his readers to be patient until the Lord's coming. But why does the Lord not come now? Why do we have to be patient? Why wait? What is holding the Lord up?

Interestingly, as Matthew writes his Gospel, Jesus has come. He came as the suffering, persecuted Son of Man, and, indeed, with power and great glory, at his crucifixion. He came as Judge of the world, the one whose integrity graphically illustrated what was good and what was evil. After his resurrection, he came in a different way. As Matthew said, right at the end of his Gospel: Jesus came and spoke to them. He said, "All authority in heaven and earth has been given to me... And ... know that I am with you always; yes, to the end of time. Indeed, the risen Jesus is with us now: I am with you always; yes, to the end of time.
