'When the Lord corrects you'

In today's second reading the writer exhorts the Hebrew Christians to see Christian life as running a race which requires inspiration, endurance to overcome obstacles and faith to reach the goal where the reward awaits. He sets out reasons why they should cheerfully bear afflictions and hardships that come their way. First of all, the writer reminds them that their Christian struggle has not yet reached the point of fatality or the shedding of blood. So he urges them to derive inspiration, courage and strength from the lives and sacrifices of many great saints of the past who have borne their suffering to the end. Secondly the writer urges them to look to Jesus and bear all sufferings because their suffering is so light and trivial compared with the suffering of Jesus.

The writer points out another reason for Christians to persevere in their faith. He encourages them to see hardship in life as discipline from God. Through discipline God does not intend to do any harm to humankind but help them reveal their best. Like a responsible and loving parent who disciplines his or her child through some form of punishment, God disciplines humankind for their good so that they may share in his holiness and joy.
